Your data will of course be processed with the highest possible sensitivity and in accordance with data protection regulations.

Please note:

If there is a justified suspicion of an infection with the coronavirus SARS-CoV-2 or the disease COVID-19, the university is required, as part of its general duty of care, to weigh your personal data protection interest against the interests of the university members and, as a consequence, of the university itself. This may lead to the situation that, in the event of proven or concrete suspicion of infection, the Executive Board must refer to the individual case in an appropriate manner, if necessary by making the name public in order to identify possible contact persons and to limit the spread of the infection as far as possible.
